

Australian public perceptions of THE TEACHING PROFESSION

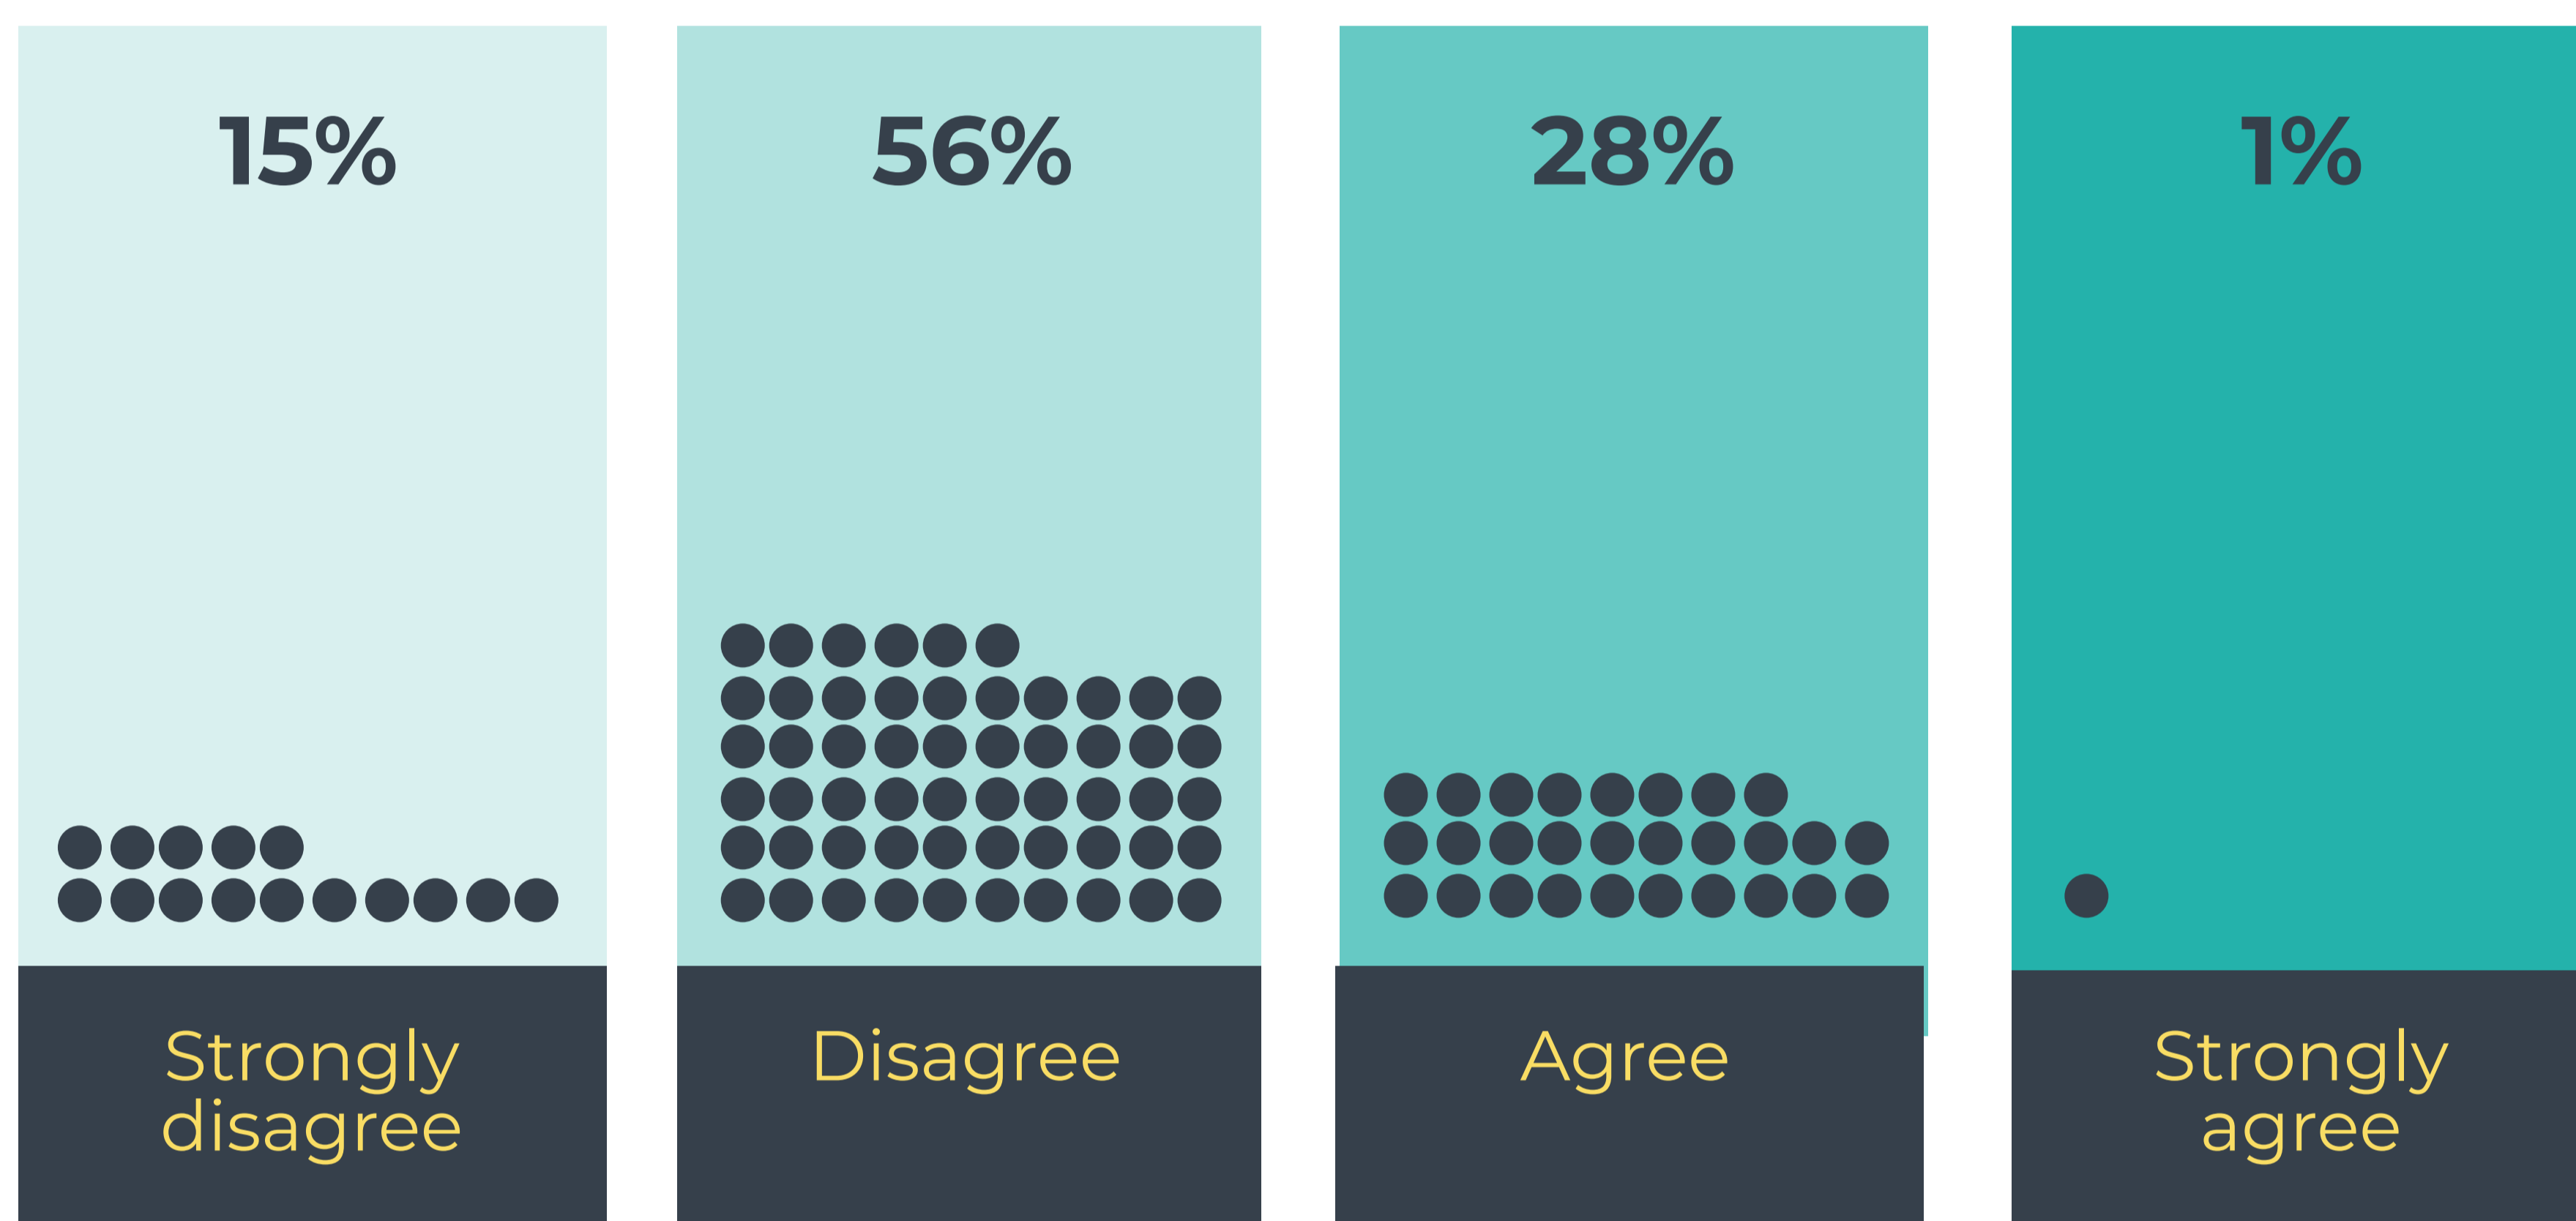

Researchers from Monash University surveyed* teachers and members of the public in Australia about public perceptions of the teaching profession. Here are their responses on the topic of appreciation.

*surveys carried out August and September 2019

Researchers say the below responses from both groups of participants suggest the public feels teachers are respected and trusted, but this is not consistently transferring to teachers feeling appreciated for their work.

Teacher responses

When asked to respond to the statement: 'I feel that the Australian public appreciates teachers'

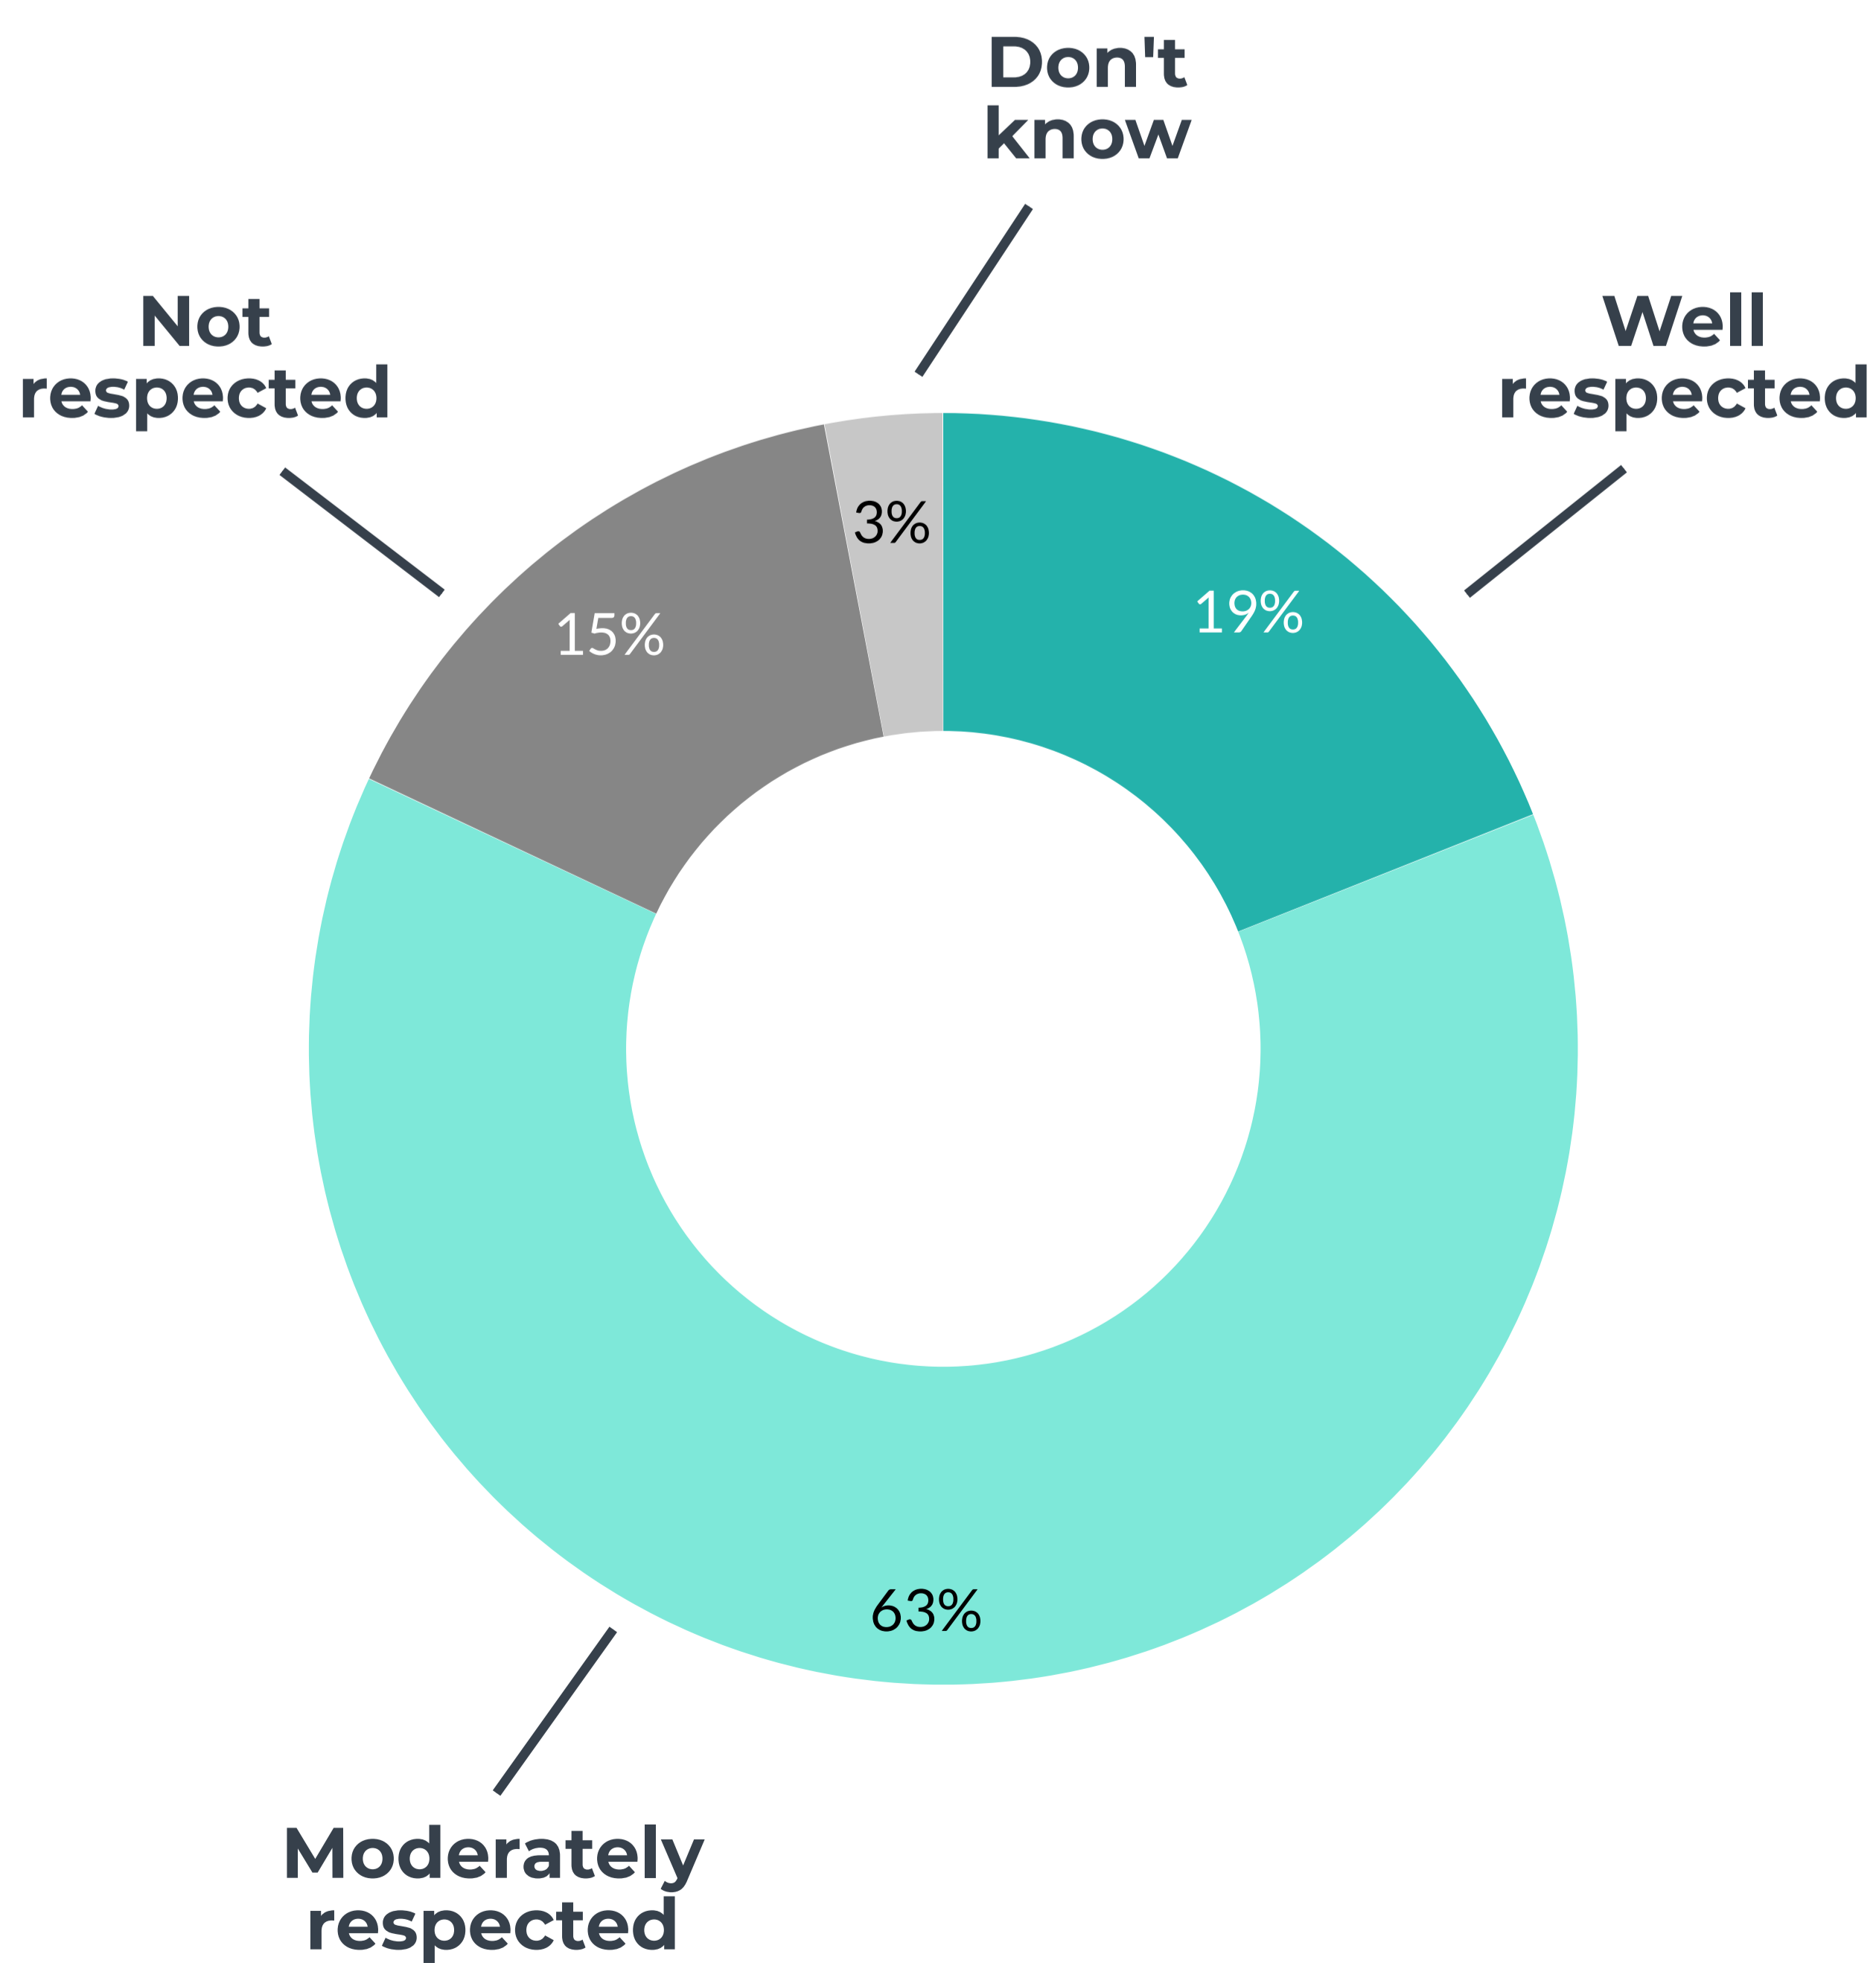

Survey comments included ...

Public responses

Public perceptions of respect for teachers

Public perceptions of trust for teachers

