Never look a gift horse in the mouth, unless, of course, the gift is from the Commonwealth government through the intermediary offices of the various state education departments, in which case you should check the hoofs as well. Some state school principals and council members have asked why they're only permitted to spend the money they've received through the Commonwealth government's $14.7 billion Building the Education Revolution program on design templates for developments that don't adequately meet their needs. Some, like Beaconsfield Upper Primary School council president Gavin McGill, have also asked whether there's some shortchanging going on. As McGill explained on ABC's Stateline Victoria in June, the school's inadequate multi-purpose hall would be replaced by something even smaller. As McGill said, 'The options that have been given to us for $2 million of funding have been costed at $900,000, so the...question we're asking is, if we accept one of these options, where's the other $1.1 million going?' The answer, in Beaconsfield Upper Primary School's case, turned out to be Beaconsfield Upper. The school was advised it would get the full-size gymnasium with extras it wanted, after the Stateline story screened. T
